

MARGARET “CANOPYMEG” LOWMAN www.canopymeg.com

Called “the real life Lorax” by National Geographic and referred to as one of the “Einsteins of the treetops” in a Wall Street Journal article, Canopymeg is an author, explorer, scientist, arbonaut (translation: treetop explorer!), Fulbright scholar, and change-agent for conservation. She has devoted over 4 decades to exploration of treetop secrets, as one of the world’s first pioneers to design the canopy toolkit, and published 10 books and over 200 peer-reviewed publications. Her latest book, The Arbonaut, is a dynamic memoir of a girl-tree-climber. She works tirelessly against the clock to save the world’s 10 most endangered forests (www.mission-green.org) using canopy walkways for ecotourism.